Selling pressure emerges

VN30 performance

After two breakthrough sessions, the VN30Index underwent a correction with a decline of 1.08% to [fill in point level], as selling pressure appeared primarily on VHM and VRE when these two stocks hit their floor prices. Additionally, selling pressure also emerged on VJC (-3.15%), MWG (-2.56%), and DGC (-2.03%). On the contrary, buying demand appeared on VCB (+6.88%), BID (+5.13%), GAS (+3.50%), VNM (+2.13%), GVR (+2.04%), and CTG (+2.00%).

VN30 Future chart: Selling pressure emerges

On the chart, the market experienced volatility as selling pressure emerged at high price levels, creating a candlestick with a long upper shadow. This indicates the possibility of a technical correction phase to retest the 2,040-2,060 point zone, the previous peak zone from October and December 2025.

However, the uptrend remains confirmed as the contract has formed a new all-time high. Additionally, the contract still closed above important short-term moving averages such as the 10-period, 20-period, and 50-period moving averages. This implies that the short-term uptrend remains intact.

In the next session, the 2,100-point threshold will serve as strong resistance while the 2,040-2,050 point zone will act as strong support.

Technical strategy

Despite the correction, the uptrend remains intact. Therefore, traders can consider taking advantage of correction phases to reopen long positions to optimize profits.
