Liquidity improves

VN30 performance

The VN30 Index continued to maintain positive signals with its fourth consecutive session of gains, with MWG as the highlight - hitting its daily price ceiling. The index rose 0.45% to 1,988 points, as capital flow showed a tendency to move into GVR (+4.04%), FPT (+2.56%), VPB (+2.36%), GAS (+2.17%), and PLX (+2.17%). On the downside, selling pressure appeared on VHM (-5.17%), VPL (-3.83%), VRE (-3.38%), and LPB (-2.75%).

VN30 Future chart: Liquidity improves

The market sent out positive signals as liquidity showed a gradual tendency to recover. In addition, the contract continued to close above both the 10-period and 20-period moving averages, with the 10-period moving average already crossed above the 20-period moving average.

The contract still confirmed a Rectangle pattern - a form of short-term accumulation. Based on this pattern, the short-term target may extend to the 2,000-2,050 point range.

In the next session, the 1,980-2,000 point range acts as strong short-term resistance. Meanwhile, the 1,880-1,900 point range serves as strong support, a zone that also coincides with the 10-period moving average.

Technical strategy

The uptrend remained intact, supported by an increase in liquidity during the last session of the previous week. Traders may consider opening long positions and take advantage of technical pullbacks to optimize returns.
